

How My Job Affects My Insurance Rates

Tuesday, 09 March 2010

Earlier, a friend of mine briefed me on the importance of being insured by a health insurance policy, as clearly, this particular insurance policy will provide the necessary healthcare support when your health isn't at its peak. According to my peer, he mentioned that subscribing to an insurance policy won't cost you an arm and a leg, as clearly, these insurance plans can be tailored towards your income level. Basically, he also told me that it is wise to dedicate at least 10 percent of your income, to pay for your insurance policy. Also, my friend informed me on how my job affects my insurance rates, whereby the insurance company also takes into account on the type of job that you are currently involved in. If you work in a stressful and high-risk occupation, your insurance premium might be marginally higher when compared to another person who works in a low-risk occupation. For example, if you travel extensively and work in a hazardous working environment, the insurance company might charge you a higher premium for your insurance coverage. Well if you are not insured by an insurance policy, perhaps it is time that you should start looking around for a good insurance plan.
